

Information about the Inclusive Talent Strategy

The Inclusive Talent Strategy is part of a big plan that the Greater London Authority (GLA) have for London.

This plan is called the London Growth Plan.

The main parts of this plan are to:

- Help people in London who do not earn enough money, to earn more money
- Work towards net zero
- Grow the economy
- Grow our services in London that help us work with other countries.

The Inclusive Talent Strategy explains what the GLA, London Boroughs and other partners will do to make it easier for everyone in London to access good work

The strategy includes three groups of things the GLA has said they will do.

GREATER
LONDON AUTHORITY

These are:

1. The GLA will listen more to employers so that the skills that people can gain match what employers need their workers to know about

2. The GLA will make it easier for people living in London to find out what training and jobs are available for them.

This will include making sure information about training is given in more different places, including GP surgeries and advice centres like Citizens Advice.

3. The GLA will work to fix the problems that stop people from working or training. This could include more affordable transport or housing in London.

They will work with employers to help them be more inclusive, through something called the 'Good Work Standard', which employers can apply for. They will help people understand their rights as an employee and how their employer should treat them.

Some of the things that the Strategy will help with so that disabled people get good work includes:

- making it easier to find information about training and work;

- asking employers to make some work experience and apprenticeship places only for young people with special needs;

- support understanding of workers employment rights.

People First (Self Advocacy) is working with the GLA to help them better understand the experiences of people with learning difficulties/disabilities in:

- Education
- Employment support
- Work

These workshops will help with make sure the work to deliver the Strategy helps Disabled Londoners with skills and work.

There will be three workshops and three prep sessions for 20 people learning difficulties/disabilities.

People will be paid £50 per workshop.

If you would like to apply, please contact Samantha Johnson to book your place.

samantha.johnson@peoplefirstltd.com

You can also call People First (Self Advocacy)
020 7274 5484